THE TRUTH ABOUT THE BILLABLE HOUR

One important aspect of law firm life that is nearly impossible to avoid is the "billable hour." Most law firms make their money by billing their clients by the hour. In order to be profitable to your firm, you must make enough money from your billable hours not only to cover your salary and your overhead, but also to generate revenue for the firm. It's not a complicated equation – the more hours you bill, the more revenue for the firm.

Firms "average," "target" or "minimum" stated billables typically range between 1700 and 2300, although informal networks often quote much higher numbers. The NALP Directory of Legal Employers (www.nalpdirectory.com) (<http://www.nalpdirectory.com/>) contains billable hour information in the "hour and lifestyle" tab, although many firms choose not to share their data.

Not all law firms have the same emphasis on billable hours. Public interest law firms, smaller law firms, and law firms outside of large metropolitan areas often require less billable hours and may place more emphasis on training, client development, community-related activities and the like. In addition, government and public interest employers typically do not have any billable hour requirements because they do not bill their hours to a paying client.

- With a half hour commute you are "working" from 7:30am to 8:30pm Monday-Friday
And 9:30am-5:30pm three Saturdays a month
- With a one hour commute you are "working" from 7:00am to 9:00pm Monday-Friday
And 9:00am to 6:00pm three Saturdays a month

Keep in mind that these schedules do not account for personal calls at work, training/observing, talking with coworkers, a longer lunch (to exercise or shop perhaps), a family funeral, pro bono work (if not treated as billable hours), serving on a Bar committee, writing an article for the bar journal, or interviewing an applicant. When contemplating offers from firms, ask questions to learn more about their billable hour policies and practices.
